ERRORS PROVE DAMAGING FIELDING

Last Inning Sees a Batting Rally is Time to Avert Disaster-Boston and Louisville Beat Washington and Cincinnati.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 10.-The champions presented about the poorest exhibition of fielding seen here this year and not until the ninth inning did they wake up to the fact that a championship game was impending. The score was 4 to 3 in favor of New York. Kittson and Robinson were sent in to bat for McJames and Ball. The former singled and "Robby" threw four balls, filling the corners with one man down. Darkness was fast coming on, when McGraw knocked a long fly to deep center to allow Clark to walk home with the tieing run. Keeler was an easy out and the game was called with the score a tie. All of New York's runs were made on errors. Attendance 1,049,

JOHN NOLAN WINS TRANSYLVANIA.

Runs Five of the Fastest Heats on Record in Field of Nine, LEXINGTON, Ky., Oct. 10.—After two more days on account of rain the meeting of the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders' association resumed at noon today with the 2:08 class trot, two heats of which had been trotted Thursday, William Penn having won the first and Rilma, the favorite, the second.

the second.

In the unfinished 2:08 class Pilot Boy, the good gray gelding from Canton, O., furnished the surprise by outfooting William Penn and the favorite, Rilma, who was heavily backed.

In the 2:13 pacing class Hal B was favorite at $25 to $30 for the field. After winning two heats Hai B was beaten out by The Etchop, who was unthought of in the betting.

two heats Hall B was beaten out by The Bishop, who was unthought of in the betting.

There were fifteen starters in the 2:27 trotters' class, which went over unfinished after Maggie Lass had won the first heat and Beaste Owens the second. Nine horses scored for the word in the Transylvania, with Dione at the pole, which she kept until well into the stretch, closely pressed by Eagle Flanagan, who passed her at the distance and won quite handliy, with Bingen second, Dione third and Gratton Boy fourth, the latter having come with a rush at the finish, taking a wheel off Keating's sulky. The fifth and deciding heat was trotted just as dusk was coming on. Gratton Boy, Eagle Flanagan and Pilatus alternated in the lead until the three-quarters pole was reached, when John Nolan joined issue with them and in a driving finish—every horse under whip—the four horses finished heads apart, with John Nolan a winner of the fastest five-heat race on record. It was the greatest race ever trotted for the Transylvania. Summaries:

It is not every night that Omaha people have an opportunity to hear an actor of the art and power of Henry Miller, neither is it every night in Omaha that an actor has the aspiration of such an audience as graced the Boyd when the curtain was rung up for the initial performance of "Heartsease" in this ity. There was evidence of the faith of the people of Omaha in Mr. Miller's ability and art in the fact that every seat was sur-steals the opera into which the young composer has thrown his whole soul and breathed the warmth of his love which found its highest ideal in the song "Heartsease." Driven from the house in disgrace be cause he would rather suffer than bring shame upon a woman, he assumes all the blame. He becomes ill and on partially recovering returns to London and in attending the opera meets Miss Neville, who in the meantime had been betrothed through the urging of her father to Sir Geoffrey Pomfret, his rival who had stolen his opera, and on that night it was being produced as the work of Sir Geoffrey. The work was a great success and the supposed author was being congratulated. Miss Neville had learned the truth of the previous occurences except the stealing of the opera. The two meet in the lobby of the theater and though the old passion is there the engagement to Sir Geoffrey is again an apparent barrier to the consummation of their hopes. In the midst of this scene the strains of his own opera are wafted to him. The mind which had wandered in his illness but come back with returned physical vigor plays a charming organ recital yesterday after- false again as the melodies in which he had noon in the Auditorium. Such is the story, with its pathos, its > ing the last, the audience not being content to leave until its wish had been gratified. There has rarely been seen in Omaha a more thoroughly artistic and impressive piece of work than Mr. Miller's in the third act With his mind in a whirl, uncertain whether is is fancy or whether his mind is playing him false or true, he kneels and listens to the strains of the opera welling out into the foyer from the theater. His mobile face, speaking what words could not tell of the workings of the mind, his every gesture and expression bore the stamp of the artist. The last act contains a choice bit of sentiment. As Eric elts at the table with his friends, going over the story of his life, with its blasted hopes, he blows out the candles one by one, typical of the gathering darkness which has closed in on his life.

With all his art all of the credit for one of the most finished performances ever seen in the city does not belong to Mr. Miller. The company, without exception, is such as makes a fit setting for the brilliant gem, The play is one which requires much, not only of the leading man, but of all. Miss Mabel Bert, as Lady Neville, was courtly and charming and of Miss Margaret Dale as Miss Neville one is at a loss to know whether she is more fascinating or effective in smiles or in tears. In the third and fourth acts she was particularly effective. Miss Ellen Mortimer as Alice Temple, the hero's sister, is pretty and does with tact and good grace her part. Augustus Cook as Lord Neville, Arthur Elliot, sr., Geoffrey Pomfret, Charles B. Welles, Captain O'Hara, Eric's friend, and C. Leslie Allen, Peter Padbury, the money lender, who could not keep a secret, but was not such a bad fellow, after all, were all faithful characterizations.

WEATHER MAKERS ARE COMING

Convention of the Men Under Prof Moore Will Meet in Omaha This

If Omaha does not enjoy good weather this week it will be due directly to the presence in the city of a host of Uncle Sam's weather men. Prof. Willis L. Moore, chief of the weather bureau, has called a meeting of all of his assistants to be held here and the chief himself will be present to open the meeting. The sessions will be held in the will represent every state and territory in the union. The object of the meeting will be to devise ways and means for improving the work of the bureau and to exchange extrical department is preparing to exhibit periences in dealing with weather problems. Covering so wide a range of territory the the different sections and their experience with these is the basis upon which the bureau establishes new lines of work. These meetings are called at intervals by the chief of the bureau. The present one will be the fifth, the last one being held at Indianapolis in 1895. Prof. Moore will arrive in Omaha with the presidential party tonight and will open the meeting Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock, adjournment being billed for Thursday afternoon. The sessions will be open to the public.

Former Editor Berkley of Ainsworth Who Was in the Signal Corps with Brooke.

One of the few Nebraska soldiers who was fortunate enough to set foot upon Porto Rican soil is J. O. Berkley of Ainsworth. Mr. Berkley was a member of the signal corps of the First Army corps, under General Brooke, and accompanied that command to Porto Rico. He has just been mustered out of the service and is on his way home. He arrived in the city yesterday.

Mr. Berkley was formerly editor of the Ainsworth Star-Journal, but when the call for volunteers came he was school superintendent of his county. He enlisted in Troop K of Captain Grigsby's Rough Riders and accompanied that body to Chickamauga. He made application for admission to the signal corps and on May 14 was assigned to service under General Brooke. When the invasion of Porto Rico commenced he was one of the 400 signal corps men that went with it. He remained in Porto Rico until September 23, when he was sent pack to this country. On his way back he fell sick and after his arrival in Washington he was sent to a hospital for several days. He was discharged from the service on Octo-

The men of the signal corps were required o do considerable work during the seven weeks they were in Porto Rico. They were engaged in frequent signal work and also strung some twenty or thirty miles of field telegraph wires. They saw some actual servce, for the division they were in was engaged in two or three scraps with the Spanlards. The division was just preparing for a pitched battle when peace was declared.

"If the announcement of peace had been delayed ten minutes, General Brooke's command would have been fighting the hardest battle that had yet occurred on the island. says Mr. Berkley. "During the seven weeks we had been there the time had been spent in forming the plan of campaign. That very morning General Brooke had decided to commence the campaign and pushed half a dozen miles inland from Guayama, his headquarters. We were on the side of a mountain and across the ravine was a strongly entrenched blockhouse. About ten minutes before General Brooke was intending to give the order of attack the message of peace ar-

There was considerable sickness among the American troops, due to the food and the climate. The soldiers received some assistance from the Porto Ricans, who seemed glad of their coming. Mr. Berkley says that about one-third of the inhabitants of the island are well educated and smart and the rising generation is receiving the smatterings of general knowledge in the schools that have been established in the last ten years. There were five other Nebraskans in General Brooke's signal corps with Mr. Berkley. They were Sam Vandervoort of this city, McGrady of Weeping Water, Whitmore and Hyatt of Lincoln and Robinson of Ord. The two former were discharged with Berk ley, but the others remain in the service.

AFTER MEIKLEJOHN

Women of the Thurston Rifles Will Try the Assistant Secretary of War for a Favor.

Now that Governor Holcomb has refused to assume the responsibility of designating which of the two Nebraska regiments of volunteers, the First or Third, shall be mustered out of the service, Assistant Secretary of War Meiklejohn will be called upon to Commercial club rooms and those present act as intercessor for the First regiment with President McKinley.

At the meeting of the women's auxiliary to the Thurston Rifles, composed of the mothers, wives and sweathearts of the men who form that organization, held at the armory of the Thurston Rifles last night, his plan was decided up consisting of Mesdames Primeau, Cross, White, Buchanan and Stokes will meet Senator Thurston and Congressman Mercer at the Millard hotel tonight immediately after the parade, and will ask them to urge Assistant Secretary of War Meiklejohn to prevail on the president to bring home the boys of
